DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1 and 2 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Phillips et al. (6765536).

Regarding Claims 1 and 2, Phillips et al. show an antenna device in Fig. 9 with a conducting base 14 and an elongate conducting element 10 EM-coupled to and extending from the base, and a parasitic conductor 12 electrically connected to and extending from the base 14, wherein it would have been obvious to the skilled artisan that the driven conducting element 10, parasitic conductor 12 and the base are mutually configured to provide conducting surfaces in which RF electrical currents can flow in a plurality of frequency bands to provide omnidirectional radiation patterns in two mutually orthogonal planes. Phillips et al. suggest at col. 8, lines 13-62, that different antenna configurations may be employed in order to provide the desired directivity. Orthogonally-polarized antenna elements fall into this teaching in order to provide the desired directivity.

3. Claims 3-24 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Phillips et al. (6765536) as applied to claim 1 above, and further in view of Holshouser et al. (6107970).

Art Unit: 2828

No insulating substrate appears to be taught by Phillips et al. Thus, the patent to Holshouser et al. is cited as resolving the level of ordinary skill in the antenna art and shows a helical antenna 46b formed on one side of a substrate 40 with the parasitic element 44 formed on the opposite side in Figures 7A and 7B.

The specific geometries of the conductors, base block, bends in the conductors as set forth in Claims 4-24, including the microstrip construction of the printed conductors in Holshouser et al. are taught and shown in the prior art of record.

The specific band of service as set forth in claim 24 is obvious to provide to the skilled artisan when designing a particular service.
